WAS HIS VICTIM HIS WIFE?

Carrie Lenz's Brutal Murderer
Was William Rosenbaum.

After diligent search by the police of the Eldridge street station, it was learned this morning that the infuriated man who shot and killed Carrie Lenz in front of the tenement at 44 Stanton street yesterday afternoon, and then turned his murderous pistol with fatal effect upon himself, is named William Rosenbaum.

His body, and that of the murdered woman, are at the Morgue.

There is a great deal of mystery surrounding this fearful double tragedy. The exact relations of the dead couple are still in doubt, although every indication would point to the fact that the murderer and his victim were husband and wife.

The shooting occurred about 7.40 o'clock last night in front of the narrow doorway of 44 Stanton street.

The man, after a short conversation with the woman, shot her in the breast, and the next instant pressed the muzzle of the same revolver against his right temple, pulled the trigger and sank deep to the sidewalk in an instant.

The young woman, it is learned, engaged lodgings at 44 Stanton street about three weeks ago, in the tenement rented by Mrs. Hamburg, on the first floor. She told Mrs. Hamburg, who was unmarried; that her name was Carrie Lenz, that she was twenty-five years old, and a waitress in Kolb's restaurant on Pearl street, near Wall, and that she had a sweetheart who might occasionally call upon her.

The girl was industrious and worked every day, having no callers for the first two weeks she was at Mrs. Hamburg's, except a young woman who lived somewhere on First street.

WHERE IS LILLIE SLITZKA?

Strange Disappearance of the Equitable's Sweet-Faced Newsgirl.

Lillie Slitzka, the rosy-cheeked, brown-haired, demure little creature who has served to the Equitable Building their afternoon papers ever since she was but little more than a baby, is missing from her accustomed place in the mellow-tinted rotunda of that big business place.

Lillie is fifteen years old, but she is small, and still seems to be as much a child as she was when, nine years ago, she first took her stand with her papers under her arm in the old building which stood where the Equitable Building is now.

The child was one of three borne left to her mother's care at the death of her father. The Widow Slitzka's little figure and brisk, business-like ways are familiar to thousands of downtown business men, who have bought their evening papers of her at the corner of Broadway and Cedar street these many years.

The boys, two nearly little fellows, have been at work for themselves for some years, and Lillie was also inducted into the work of newspaper selling by her mother. The family were close together in their work, and always went home together at night. They lived in a comfortable little flat at 162 Webster avenue, Jersey City Heights, and between them had laid up a snug little store against a rainy day in a savings bank.

Lillie attended the public school up to two years ago, coming over to "business" as she called it, since then she has been a newspaper girl.

One week ago the sweet-faced, shy little woman disappeared, and all the efforts of the police of three cities—New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City—have failed to discover her whereabouts.

"Some time ago she became acquainted with Annie and Mary McGee, who live on the Heights at 241 Central avenue alone," says the distracted mother.

"An evening world reporter called a letter to Lillie, and after reading it she wanted to go to a picnic. I let her go, and that was the last I ever saw of her. I went to the McGees the next day, but they kept me in the hall while Lillie went out by a back door. She said with a Mrs. Richards, a good woman, in Park avenue, that night."

"It is all a mystery to me," he said. "Lillie was a modest, shy little one, not like most girls. I always kept an eye out for her, and no one ever molested her or offered any advances to her except once, and I warned that man, a stranger, out of the building. That was a year ago."

"I had Mary and Annie McGee before Judge Wanser, but they told him they were not married, and she was a girl."

"Ex-Alderman Tom Cleary, janitor of the Equitable, spoke with much feeling this morning."

"It is all a mystery to me," he said. "Lillie was a modest, shy little one, not like most girls. I always kept an eye out for her, and no one ever molested her or offered any advances to her except once, and I warned that man, a stranger, out of the building. That was a year ago."
